THE BATMAN

Out of the night flashes a black, gray, and gold clad figure, swinging from the rooftops on the end of a long, silken rope. Below him are thugs, fleeing the scene of a robbery. Before they realize what is upon them, the mysterious figure drops down, throwing the shadow of an enormous bat upon the walls behind him, as he rips into the disconcerted thieves like an avenging tornado.

ROBIN— BOY WONDER

Following close behind the bat-like figure, there appears the form of a teenage boy, clad in a golden cape, red vest, and the Lincoln-green so familiar to the readers of the legends of Robin Hood. Who are these two crime fighters, and for what purpose do they appear to do battle against the almost overwhelming odds of the underworld? This is their story—the saga of Batman and Robin!

THE BAT SIGNAL

A new adventure for Batman and Robin was about to begin. The huge symbol of a bat cast its shadow upon the clouds of the night sky. A large searchlight upon the roof of police headquarters was summoning the aid of the mysterious duo who were so efficient in solving so many of the most baffling mysteries. It was not long before the super-sleek Batmobile appeared before headquarters.

MIDNIGHT CONFERENCE

Commissioner Gordon ushered Batman and Robin into his private office. There he presented them with the facts of the latest crime to which there seemed to be no clue. A valuable formula had been stolen. Also, many of the biggest racketeers of the country had recently assembled in the city. Could there be some connection? If so, how could they get proof? This was The Batman's task.

ROOF TOP VIGIL

For several nights, the shadowy form of The Batman kept watch over the building where the racketeers frequently gathered upon the top floor. Through the skylight he was able to see them, and hear parts of their conversation. No clue, however, was revealed as to their reason for being in the city, nor of any connection with the stolen formula case he had hoped to solve.

CHLOROFORM VICTIM

While The Batman kept vigil upon the roof, Robin stayed below, close to the Batmobile. Suddenly a hand reached out of the darkness, clasping a chloroform-soaked cloth to his face. In a moment, he sank to the ground unconscious. When Batman returned, Robin was just beginning to revive. "This doesn't make sense," exclaimed Batman. "Why should someone knock you out and then just leave?"

GRIM REALIZATION

"Perhaps while I was unconscious," suggested Robin, "someone planted a bomb in the Batmobile, hoping to get both of us that way!" The eyes of Batman narrowed as he realized the possibility of Robin's theory. Had he started the Batmobile, they might have both been blown up. In fact it seemed the only reasonable explanation for the unexplained attack upon Robin.

INTO THE BATMOBILE

Batman and Robin made a thorough search of the Batmobile, but found no indication that it might have been wired as a trap. They also tested the fuel tank, to make certain that no liquid explosive had been added. "Perhaps the plan was simply to delay us," said Robin. The two vaulted over the sides of the Batmobile and into their seats. "Let's check the police reports!" exclaimed the Batman.

FACE OF THE JOKER

As the crime bosses gathered for another meeting, the lights suddenly went out, and the room was filled with chilling laughter. Then a large face was projected upon the wall, announcing the arrival of The Joker. "Sorry to have kept you waiting for so many days," came a voice from the darkness, "I have had men keeping watch, hoping to discover the traitor among you before now."

CRIME CZAR

The Joker continues speaking to the crooks . . . "A portion of the secret formula I arranged for you to steal is missing. One of you is a traitor against my plans to become crime czar of the nation. My spies have told me that none of you have as yet tried to slip the missing formula to my major rival, so I must now resort to giving you all a lie detector test. Into the next room, all of you!"

POISON PELLET

"So!" exclaims the Joker, pointing a finger at one of the men, "The lie detector shows that you are the traitor. But you no longer have the copy of the formula on you. What did you do with it?"

Before the Joker can stop him, the crook swallows a pellet of poison. "You'll never torture me!" he gasps, as he falls to the floor. Only the Cat Woman knows where to find the formula now!"

BATMAN STRIKES!

Suddenly, the Batman crashes through the skylight, knocking two of the thugs to the floor. The Joker attempts to escape, but is trapped as police swarm through the door. "You have no evidence against us," screams the Joker. "The man on the floor killed himself, with poison!"

"We have evidence of other crimes," says Batman. "Someone sent the commissioner a large package of proof!"

THE JOKER IN JAIL

"But why would the Cat Woman send the police evidence against the Joker and all of his accomplices?" asks Robin.

"Probably to remove competition," explains Batman. "And now that she has the Joker's gang out of the way, she'll probably start planning something really big!"

A loud laugh rings out from the nearby cell. "Crime marches on, while the Joker gets a rest!" mocks the crime clown.

NIGHTLY PATROL

The Joker is in jail, but a new crime wave soon engulfs Gotham City. Each night Batman and Robin can be seen swinging from one rooftop to another, in pursuit of criminals. "They definitely seem to be organized," says Robin. "Do you think this might be the Cat Woman's gang?"

"We should soon find out," says Batman. "We'll catch one of them eventually."

THE PENGUIN'S
TRAP

The Batman sets out for the address found upon the crook, and arrives at an abandoned house near the edge of town. Robin stays in the Batmobile, as Batman carefully explores inside. Suddenly a trap door opens in the floor, and Batman falls ten feet to the floor of a pit. A voice is heard from a hidden speaker: "Welcome, Batman!" It is the voice of The Penguin. "At last you have stepped into my trap!"

SPIKES OF DEATH

As Batman looks for a way out of the pit into which he has fallen, he sees a huge metal slab, hinged to one wall, begin to descend. Imbedded in the heavy slab are steel spikes. Quickly he turns on his belt radio, and calls to Robin, who is waiting in the Batmobile outside. But as Robin dashes for the house, he finds his way blocked by two towering guards. Without hesitation, he charges.

ROBIN IN ACTION

The huge guards lunge at Robin, but the slim youth manages to side-step them. Then, as they turn to try again, an agile leap carries Robin once more beyond their grasp. More cautiously now, the two begin to close in slowly on the boy from two sides. The Boy Wonder reaches out swiftly and grabs one of them by the arm. Then, in one quick motion, he throws the giant over his shoulder into the other.

As The Penguin arrives at the pre-arranged appointment where he hopes to purchase a certain secret formula, he senses that something is wrong. "Sorry, Penguin," says the other man, "but now that the cops are rounding up your gang, I know where my best bet lies. I've already mailed the formula to the Cat Woman. That should put me in good enough with her that she'll let me join the winning team."

PENGUIN CAPTURED

"Too bad this state has abolished the death penalty," says Batman to The Penguin, as the arch criminal is finally brought into the police station. "With the number of murders to your credit, one lifetime isn't exactly an equal payment." The Penguin stares sullenly at his captor and then exclaims, "You may have defeated me for now, Batman, but you still haven't the secret formula you seek." The Penguin was right!

SINISTER SMILE

The Cat Woman smiles, as she recounts her good fortune. "Although The Joker discovered my plans to deprive him of half of his stolen papers after only one part of the formula had been taken, one of his own men removed the rest of it from its hiding place, after The Joker's capture, and sent it to me, in hopes of joining my gang. Now my problem is to get the missing part my own agent took!"

"LET'S GO"

Batman rereads a letter that had arrived for him at police headquarters. "... Only you and Robin can help me. Please come tonight!"

"It sounds important, Batman," says Robin. "Let's go!"

That night, the sleek Batmobile roars up to the designated spot. "Stay here while I check," says Batman. But when he returns, Robin is gone.

ROBIN IS KIDNAPPED

Robin has been kidnapped by agents of the Cat Woman. Luring Batman and Robin with a fake message for help, the agents pounced on Robin as soon as Batman was out of sight. Bound and blind-folded, he is taken into the lair of the Cat Woman. "At last we meet again, Robin! Too bad I was unable to invite your partner along, but that was not part of my plans at the moment!"

FIGHTING BACK

The Cat Woman instructs her men to untie the Boy Wonder, but as soon as they do, Robin jumps into action, with the Judo and Karate he has learned from Batman. Eventually, however, the weight of numbers takes its toll, and he is soon subdued once again. "Too bad you will not co-operate peacefully," says the Cat Woman. "Guards—tie his arms apart . . . Then bring me a knife!"

THREAT OF THE CAT WOMAN

As Robin is securely tied, within the secret hide-out of the Cat Woman, the sinister villainess approaches him with a long blade. "I have always had a fondness for you and the Batman, but I have also had a desire to revenge myself for the times I have been captured and sent to prison. Now I'll have a fitting revenge at last," she says as she swings the sword towards Robin's vest.

BAT-A-RANG
BULLS-EYE

Unknown to the Cat Woman, Batman has been able to trail her to the Catlair, by following the radio signals from Robin's belt. As he approaches, he silently removes his Bat-a-rang from its compartment in his belt and hurls it at the single thug standing guard outside, knocking the gun from his hand. He then leaps into action, hoping he will be in time to rescue Robin from the Cat Woman.

THE ENEMIES CLASH

As Batman enters the Cat Woman's hideout, he unwittingly crosses a photo-electric beam which warns the Cat Woman of his arrival. As he enters the main chamber, she is prepared, and lashes out at him with full force. "Too bad you had to interfere," she says. I was not going to harm Robin, and brought him here blindfolded. Now that you know where I am, I may have to kill you both!"

DEADLY
CLAWS

"You see, Batman," explains the Cat Woman, "when one of my agents once knocked Robin unconscious, he copied a part of an important formula upon his vest in invisible ink. That is all I wanted to obtain. It was a fitting revenge to use one of you to accomplish my ends. Now I must escape," she says as she releases a large cat in the tunnel between her and her foe.

THE RIDDLER

"The Riddler has escaped!" exclaims Police Commissioner Gordon, as he ushers Batman and Robin into his office. "He's the last one I would prefer to see on the loose again," says Batman, grimly. The Joker and Penguin are cunning and diabolical, but they are still quite sane. The Riddler is more prone to do the unexpected; and often with no reasonable motive other than mischief."

A TRAP FOR BATMAN

Batman's thoughts turn to his past encounters with The Riddler—the unpredictable villain more intent upon revenge upon Batman than in escaping secretly with his loot. Before each crime, he would make public a riddle. The correct answer would warn of where he was about to strike. And in each of these places would also be awaiting a trap for the arrival of Batman.

TIME FOR A RESCUE

As Batman and Robin reach the top of the Gotham Tower Building, they are suddenly engulfed in a cloud of sleeping gas. Armed thugs with guns and gasmasks quickly overcome the Dynamic Duo, and shove Batman over the side of the building. Batman revives in time to grasp a hand on the tower clock, and stop his fall. "I see you're just on time," taunts The Riddler. "Do drop by this way again?"

DEADLY ROBOT

Many villains have attempted to outwit Batman without success. Some have returned for many encounters, but most have gone down to crushing defeat upon the first attempt. One of the most brilliant of these was Prof. Thinker, whose invention of an assassin robot almost spelled doom for the caped crime-fighter. But with swift reflexes, Batman dodged the twin laser beams and disarmed the weapon.

MONSTROUS ILLUSION

The strange gas of Dr. Hypno left its victims with strong visions of gigantic monsters. These visions were so real that the individuals often died of fright. Batman suddenly found himself trapped in a cloud of such gas. His senses reeled, but his mighty will power fought the illusion, and he was able to shake his mind back to reality. Dr. Hypno had underestimated the endurance of the Batman.

DECOY

"I've got you now!" came the mysterious voice from the shadows. It was the voice of Gotham City's master criminal. For months the identity of this villain had remained a secret. But now his men had captured Batman, and his main worry was over. Confidently he came to finish Batman himself, unaware that the crimefighter had allowed himself to be caught, as bait. Suddenly the police closed in.

BEASTLY ENCOUNTER

Trailing a criminal to a remote section of Africa, Batman and Robin landed the Batplane out of sight, and then crept silently toward the large cave in which the villain had constructed his hideout. But the criminal kept many wild animals caged nearby, and released a giant gorilla as soon as he spotted Batman. But as the beast grabbed Batman, Robin hurled a rock, stunning him, and Batman escaped.

FLAMING WELCOME

Trailing a racketeer to his lair, Batman and Robin suddenly realized they had walked into a trap. Flames shot up on every side of them, following trails of oil carefully spilled on every side of the secret retreat. But the villain had not counted on the quick wits of Batman. Among the collection of trophies present were two large African drums. Inside these, the two rolled to safety.

WINGED GIANT

One of Batman's hardest tasks did not end with the imprisonment of a villain, but began with it. A mad scientist was captured before he could carry out his plan of releasing giant birds within the city, and then pulling robberies during the confusion. But his birds had escaped. It took two weeks before the daring Batman was able to lure them all into awaiting nets.

RACE AGAINST DEATH

Just as the ceremony to honor Batman's achievements was coming to a close, the keen eyes of the masked crime-fighter caught a horrifying sight. So intent had been the spectators, that a small child had wandered, unnoticed, onto the nearby railroad tracks. With all of the speed at his command, the trained athlete leaped swiftly into the path of an oncoming train, and carried the child to safety.

WHIRLPOOL

It was a dangerous risk, but Batman had taken many chances before. There was no criminal to be caught, but the lives of many children were at stake. The rare serum being flown to the hospital had fallen into the turbulent river. Only one man—the Batman—dared defy the force of the whirlpools to retrieve it. Everyone waited anxiously as he dove out of sight. As he reappeared, they knew he had won.

HIDDEN LOOT

"The Baffler" had wanted to be as famous as The Riddler. But Batman had caught him within one block of his first robbery. "At least you won't find my loot!" he said. "And as long as it's hidden, I'll never run out of fuel." But like The Riddler, he told what he did not want known. "You don't run out of fuel when a tank's not empty," said Batman as he found the loot within the nearby military museum.
